Bus Panic

Of course, there are things that the UK has and there are things that it doesn't have.

I remember the day that I got on the bus alone for the first time
after we moved home.

The day before, Mev explained to me which bus I should get on and where to get off.

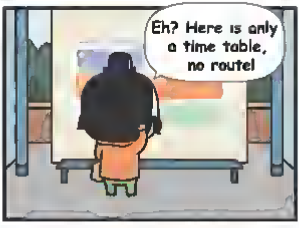
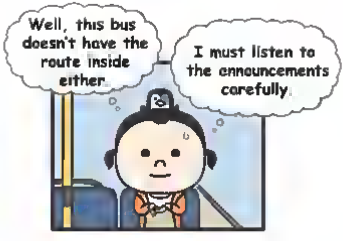
So the next day,
I went to the bus stop near us
and looked for a bus route.



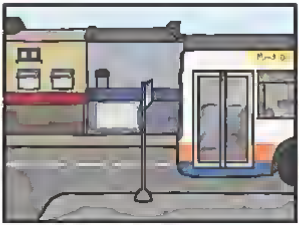
However, they didn't have it as they do in Korea

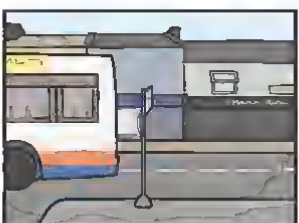
I was a bit worried, but, ...

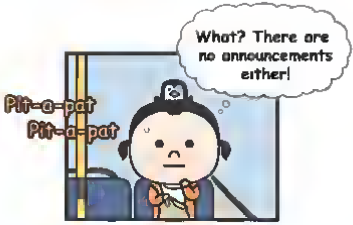
... anyway, a bus arrived
so I got on the bus.



Through the window,
I watched the unfamiliar town's view
with perked up ears.





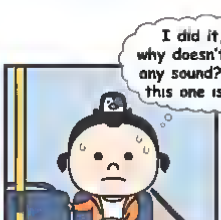


While the bus passed by a few stops,
there was no sound at all.

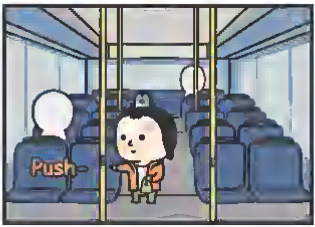
Also as it was a weekday,
the bus was very empty.

I almost considered asking the driver but I decided just to wait.

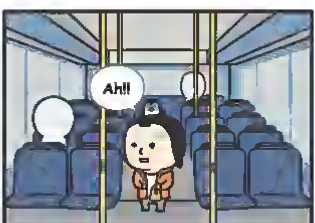
Finally, I saw a sign so I pushed the button to stop the bus.



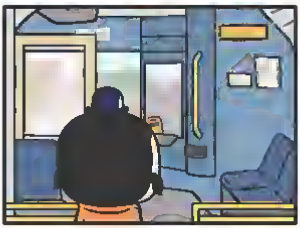
The button didn't make any noise.



Push~



Ah!!



After that one bus trip,...

. I felt like I got 10 years older.

It was scary.
